Designing Streets for Kids: presenting new design guidance for child-focused urban streets

Organization Details
Organization: NACTO-Global Designing Cities Initiative, United States of America
Organization Country: United States of America

Summary
Streets connect neighbourhoods, provide access to the city, serve local economies, and host critical services. The way streets are designed affects our quality of life, impacts the air we breathe, influences the economic vitality, and informs our mobility choices, particularly for children and their caregivers. NACTO-GDCI’s just-released design guidance will pave the way for cities to implement streets that are safe and healthy, comfortable and convenient, and inspirational and educational—cities that better serve everyone, especially children. This three-part event introduces Designing Streets for Kids, a new resource for envisioning, designing, planning, and implementing urban street transformations focused on children and caregivers; discusses the many benefits of safe and sustainable street design; and showcases street design examples from around the world. Through this event, we hope to inspire leaders, inform practitioners and empower communities!
